WOMEN DISCUSS AFRICAN-AMERICAN ISSUES

The lives of African women in America and American women in Africa was the subject of a conference held at St. Lawrence University and Potsdam College in celebration of Black History Month and Women's History Month.

The aim of the conference, held Friday, February 26 to Sunday, February 28, was to bring together African and African-American women who have lived, studied, and worked in many parts of Africa and the United States.

Participants included Micere Mugo, of Kenya, a visiting professor at the African Studies and Research Center at Cornell University; Njoki Kamuyu, a native of Birmingham, Alabama, who lived in Kenya for 17 years, a teacher in Ypsilanti, Michigan; Mumbi wa Mania, a teacher from New York

City; Leslie Hill, assistant professor of Political Science at Bates college; Maureen Eke, a native of Nigeria and associate Outreach coordinator and Educational Resource Center coordinator of Michigan State University's African Studies Center; and Asenath Okai, a native of Kenya and Kiswahili teacher at St. Lawrence.

The Conference was co-sponsored by St. Lawrence

University, Potsdam College and Clarkson University. The co-chairs were Celia Nyamweru, associate professor of anthropology at SLU, and Anne Sisson-Runyan, chair of the Political Science department and coordinator of the Women's Studies program at Potsdam College.

Tenure Granted to All Candidates

The Board approved tenure and promotion to all candidates under consideration. The professors granted tenure are Associate Professor of Physics Daniel Koon, Associate Professor of Modern Languages Roy Caldwell, Associate Professor of Music Stanley Romanstein, Associate Professor of Education James Shuman, and Associate Professor of Modern Languages Ingrid Stupa.

Delegate Reports

The student and faculty delegates to the Board brought their concerns before the Board at the Saturday session as well as in the various committees.

According to Ellis, Shira Gabirel, student delegate to the Board, won Trustee support for the relocation of the Coffeehouse to a theme cottage in the student affairs subcommittee. Ellis himself called for revisions to the new room search policy that Thelmo called for in their resolution last week.

According to Wells, the faculty will have to wait on a compensation policy, but the Board did approve a six percent increase in faculty and staff.
